

A BROKEN SYSTEM

Wasting is a condition where a child is too thin and is at increased risk of death, disease and poor development. Children need prompt sustained treatment to enable full recovery.

UN Agencies support treatment services in countries all over the world. However, how this support is currently organised complicates and compromises care.

*MUAC: Mid-Upper Arm Circumference • Photo credit: Simon Pierre Diouf, WFP

The current system is broken.

But with a sustained commitment to reform, we can reach more kids with the care that they deserve.